I know where she lives in is ungrammatical, not because of the terminal preposition, but because we don't use 'live in' after 'where'. I know the village she lives in is acceptable. // I don't know where she is travelling to/ from are fine, as is I don't know where she is travelling , but they all mean different things.

makes it, as they very well know, which is why they like her so much -- and then the third one, that wasn't quite so tall. She was the queen. She kind of led them, the other two peeking around and making their shoulders round. She didn't look around, not this queen, she just walked straight on slowly, on these long white prima donna legs.
